AZERBAIJAN AND OSCE: 20 YEARS OF COOPERATION

Ambassador Koray Targay
Head of the OSCE Office in Baku

The year of 2012 marks the 20th anniversary of Azerbaijan’s membership in the Organization for Security and Co-operation in Europe (OSCE), Baku having joined the OSCE on January 30, 1992.

The history of OSCE
Our organization traces its origins to the détente period of the early 1970s, when the Conference on Security and Co-operation in Europe (CSCE) was created to serve as a multilateral forum for dialogue and negotiation between East and West. After meetings lasting more than two years in Helsinki and Geneva, the CSCE reached agreement on the Helsinki Final Act, which was signed on 1 August 1975. This document contained a number of key commitments on politico-military, economic and environmental and human rights issues that became central to the so-called Helsinki Process. It also established ten fundamental principles (the Decalogue) governing the behavior of States toward their citizens, as well as toward each other.

Until 1990, the CSCE functioned mainly as a series of meetings and conferences that built on and extended the participating States’ commitments, while periodically reviewing their implementation. However, with the end of the Cold War, the Paris Summit of November 1990 set the CSCE on a new course. In the Charter of Paris for a New Europe, the CSCE was called upon to play its part in managing the historic change taking place in Europe and responding to the new challenges of the post-Cold War period, which led to its acquiring permanent institutions and operational capabilities.

As part of this institutionalization process, the name of the organization was changed from the CSCE to the OSCE by a decision of the Budapest Summit of Heads of State or Government in December 1994.

Azerbaijan as an important actor

Azerbaijan is a young democracy, which restored its independence on 18 October 1991. Since then, six presidential, four parliamentary and three municipal elections have been held in Azerbaijan. Azerbaijan has achieved remarkable political stability and high economic growth, developing the energy sector, and generating high revenues from oil and gas exports. Azerbaijan reduced the poverty rate from 49% in 2001 to 11% in 2009, scored a record 35% GDP growth in 2007, followed by a consistent growth trend henceforth. These developments have naturally heightened Azerbaijan’s international commitments also adding substantially to the challenges in the local environment involving the work of OSCE.

Establishment of the OSCE Office in Baku

Almost 12 years have passed since July 2000, when the OSCE Office in Baku (the Office) began operations in Azerbaijan, based on OSCE Permanent Council Decision No. 318 dated 16 November 1999. During this decade, Azerbaijan has experienced significant political, social and economic developments, and the Office has implemented its mandate in all three OSCE dimensions of security and stability in response to emerging local needs and requirements. Specifically, the Office promotes the implementation of all OSCE principles and commitments; co-operates with the Government of Azerbaijan; co-ordinates activities with the Chairman-in-Office and other OSCE institutions; establishes and maintains contacts with local authorities, political parties, other international actors, non-governmental organizations, mass media, universities and research institutes.

What we do

The Office possesses a broad mandate, which covers major areas of concern in all OSCE dimensions including the human, political, economic and environmental aspects of security and stability. The OSCE Office in Baku must not be identified with the “Minsk Group” Office, which represents the OSCE Chairman-in-Office in issues related to the Nagorno-Karabakh conflict.

The political projects under the first dimension support the Government’s reforms of law enforcement, including community policing, border control and public assembly management, and major update and revision of basic police training; as well as combating terrorism, organized crime, corruption and trafficking in human beings. The Office implemented a five-year project to assist in the modernization of police training, which culminated in adoption of the new curriculum extending basic police training from three months to six. Likewise, the Office supports the Azerbaijani Police with training on modern crowd control methods since six years.

In the Economic and Environmental dimension, fast economic development has shifted the focus to supporting initiatives by the Government and the international community for strengthening good governance, promoting transparency and fostering Small- and Medium-sized Enterprise (SME) development. The Office has also succeeded in highlighting the major environmental concerns in Azerbaijan including water management, access to environmental information, environmental education, as well as energy policy dialogue, including renewable energy.

The Office’s Human Dimension activities have demonstrated particular dynamism, encompassing achievements in both the Rule of Law and Democratization. The Rule of Law and Human Rights programme supports legal and judicial reforms throughout the Country. This includes conducting trial and detention monitoring, capacity building for legal professionals, authorities and civil society, as well as increasing awareness about mechanisms to ensure full exercise of human rights.

Since it was established in 2006, the Democratization program has made strides in the environments of media freedom, election administration and democratic governance. It has established close, productive working relationships with major Government partners, including the Presidential Administration, Parliament and the Central Election Commission, while expanding the capacities of civil society and media, especially the public broadcaster ITV. Furthermore, it has been a key developer of crucial pending and adopted legislation, such as the Law on the Prevention of Domestic Violence, amendments to the Election Code, the Law on Access to Information and the decriminalization of defamation.

During the past decade, in response to the growing national requirements and successful co-operation with the Government and the civil society, the Office expanded multi-fold, generating a budget growth from €595,500 to €2,826,000 per year; the number of international staff from five to twelve presently, representing eight different OSCE participating States, and relying on the fine work of 27 national staff members, up from five in 2000. I am the sixth Head of the OSCE Office in Baku, succeeding previous Ambassadors from Turkey, Spain, Italy, Switzerland and the Netherlands.

In conclusion

The National Security Concept of Azerbaijan identified democratic development of the country and its integration into the Euro-Atlantic area as the strategic choice. I am convinced this is the path that Azerbaijan does and will pursue. Our duty is to support this Country in its democratization efforts through the capacity building activities, supporting legislative reforms, bringing best practises from other participating States and so on. I am sure that Azerbaijan has all the intellectual human resources to make serious achievements in the nearest future. Our aim is to assist and stand by the Azerbaijani nation to shorten the way it needs for reaching the set targets.

SECULAR STATE IS ‘AZERBAIJANI’S CHOICE,’ BAKU MUSLIM ADMINISTRATION TELLS IRAN

Paul Goble

Azerbaijan Diplomatic Academy

The Scientific-Religious Council of the Administration of Muslims of the Caucasus has expressed concern about the appearance of statements and articles by Iranian religious leaders criticizing Azerbaijan, pointed to the rebirth of Islam in Azerbaijan since the end of Soviet times, but reaffirmed that “a secular state is the choice of [the Azerbaijani] people,” and insisted that Azerbaijan wants to live in peace and harmony with its neighbors and expects them to support rather than block Baku’s efforts to end Armenia’s occupation of Azerbaijani territory.

In a 900-word declaration issued on May 12, the Council noted that “the Azerbaijani people, having joined itself 14 centuries ago to the Islamic world, has always been proud of its holy religious values and has operated on these values in forming itself into a nation” and pointed out that, “with the moment of acquiring independence,” Azerbaijan’s attachment to Islam has found expression in the country’s national flag and in the actions of both former President Heydar Aliyev and current President Ilham Aliyev.[1]

Under their leadership, the declaration continues, Azerbaijan has achieved great success in all spheres of life, an “undoubted reflection” of the great role that “the preservation of [Azerbaijan’s] national-spiritual traditions and respectful relation to [its] religious values, which stand on the basis of these traditions and to those of representatives of all religions.”

If in Soviet times, the Council notes, there were only 18 mosques, today there are “about 2,000” of them. More than 400 of these have been restored with assistance from the Heydar Aliyev Foundation, and that foundation, the Muslim group notes, have helped restore mosques abroad, including most recently in Serbia. “This process is continuing,” the declaration continues, “thanks to the personal attention and concern of the chief of state,” something that “very much gratifies the Azerbaijani people.”

But “the choice of [that people] is a secular state,” the group says. “The basic law of the contemporary Azerbaijan state strengthens the legal, democratic and secular state system and defends our freedom of belief. As citizens of a state, which is devoted to our national-spiritual heritage, we, the leaders of science and religion of the Azerbaijani Republic, cannot remain indifferent to the denial of the services before our people and statehood of respected President Ilham Aliyev, who has been chosen by the people having won the trust of millions of people” and who has defended our national-spiritual values.”

Consequently, the declaration goes on, Azerbaijanis cannot accept the kind of criticism of President Aliyev and the Azerbaijani state, which some religious leaders of Iran have lodged or the employment of ultimatums against our people and state or other threats to “our independent policy.” Indeed, it says, “we consider this interference in our internal affairs.”

“The true cause of the provocations directed against our people and state,” the Baku Muslim Council says, “consists not so much in religious concern, Islamic solidarity, or the demonstration of brotherhood or concern about the feelings of our people, as such statements imply, but rather through the misuse of the Islamic religion an effort to harm our stability and to create conflicts within society.”

Given that President Ilham Aliyev and all Azerbaijani officials have made it clear that “no aggression of any kind will be allowed against neighboring Iran from the territory of Azerbaijan,” such Iranian statements are especially unfortunate. “Our goal,” the Baku Muslim scholars say, “is to live in our region and in the world with all nations and states on the basis of peaceful relations and mutual cooperation. As an independent state, we hope that our friends will be pleased by our successes, and that which we want for ourselves, we want for others.”

Moreover, the Council says, regarding the restoration of the territorial integrity of Azerbaijan through the ending of the Armenian occupation, “we hope for the just position of the world community and the support of fraternal and friendly countries.” Unfortunately, it adds, “the bitter truth is that when we really need a demonstration of Islamic solidarity and religious concern, we do not feel this support.”

“When in Soviet times, our religious values were under threat and when Armenian extremists committed acts of aggression against our people, the steps that should have been taken were not, but now it is impossible to understand the appearance of such unnecessary declarations” as those the Iranian Muslim leaders have made. “We regret that we do not see fatwas of influential religious leaders of Iran in response to the occupation of the lands of Azerbaijan, the destruction of mosques in Shusha, Aghdam, and hundreds of other Islamic prayer plays, the driving out of a million Azerbaijani Muslims from their native hearths. On the contrary, we have become witnesses of the consistent material and moral support [by Iran] of Armenia, which is an aggressor country.”

The Council concludes that, “with Allah’s help, the Azerbaijani people will never fall from provocations and shameful rumors and will overcome all obstacles on the path of the independence of our country.” And “we call upon the religious leaders of neighboring Iran to put an end to the baseless slander and criticism and not to be subject to inventions, which show a lack of respect to our Islamic morality and national spiritual values.”

Notes

The Revolutionary committee (Revkom) established with the direct participation of Turkey declared in Gumri, on November 28, 1920, about the victory of Soviet power in Armenia, while a day later, the Revkom formed by the Bolsheviks in the district city of Kazakh in the west of Azerbaijan also proclaimed Soviet power in Armenia. However, in order to give the new structure a legitimate character and to avoid the possible dissatisfaction of the Turks, the Soviet-organized Revkom listed as its place of formation the Armenian city of Dilizhan. The Revkom itself reached Dilizhan only a day later, on November 30. [1] It should be noted that at that time only one member of the Revkom was in Dilizhan, while Sarkis Kasyan, the chairman of this new organ, hurried to join him. The arrival of the remaining members of the committee was expected on December 3. [2]

An intense struggle for the right to be the first to enter Erivan, to seize power throughout the entire republic and thereby obtain legalization at an all-Armenian level broke out between the two revolutionary committees. In order to give political weight to the so-called Dilizhan Revkom which was under Russian control and in a celebratory manner send it on to Erivan, according to a directive from Moscow on November 30, N. Narimanov, the chairman of the Azrevkom, and M.D. Huseynov, the peoples commissar of international affairs, sent the Armenian communists in Dilizhan a telegram of greetings concerning the results of the session of the Political and Organizational Bureaus of the Central Committee of the AKP(b) in which the participants were G. Ordzhonikidze, S. Ter-Danelyan (Sarkis), Ye. Stasova, G. Kaminsky, N. Narimanov, A. Karayev, M.D. Huseynov, and others. At the session of the bureaus, the following decision was adopted: from now on, no borders exist between Soviet Azerbaijan and Soviet Armenia; Zangazur and Nakhchivan pass to the jurisdiction of Armenia. [3]

On December 1, 1920, a celebratory session of the Baku Soviet devoted to the proclamation of Soviet power in Armenia took place in Baku. At this session, N. Narimanov, the chairman of the Azrevkom, spoke and publicized the Declaration adopted earlier by the Political and Organizational Bureaus: “Soviet Azerbaijan, having seen the struggle of the fraternal Armenian toiling people against the power of the Dashnaks, who have shed and continue to shed the innocent blood of our best Communist comrades within Armenia and Zangazur, declares that from now on no territorial issues can be the cause of mutual bloodletting of two immemorial neighboring peoples, the Armenians and the Muslims, and that the territory of Zangazur and Nakhchivan districts are an inalienable part of Soviet Armenia.” [4] In the most complex situation when Armenia, having suffered defeat at the hands of Turkey, had practically broken into pieces and the Revkoms proclaimed at Dilizhan and Gumri could not resolve to appear in Erivan, this declaration turned out to be something unexpected even for the Armenians themselves. When on November 30, G. Ordzhonikidze by direct line declared to A. Nazaretyan this surprising news, the latter involuntarily responded: “Bravo, Azerbaijani!” [5]

It is worth noting that the concession of part of the territory of Azerbaijan to Armenia at the end of 1920 was not the first and not the only such a case in the history of the two republics. The first time this issue arose was on May 26, 1918, after the Georgian fraction left the Transcaucasus Seim and proclaimed the independence of Georgia. Confronted with a fait accompli, the Azerbaijani and Armenian fractions of the Transcaucasus Seim began active talks about defining the borders of their future states. On this issue, Armenia turned out to be in a complicated situation. That was made more difficult because the Armenians could not agree on what city should be the capital of their republic. Aleksandropol (Gumri) remained under the control of the Turks, and more than half of the population of Erivan was made up of Azerbaijanis; they had their own deputies in the Transcaucasus Seim, and a Muslim National Council had been running the city since the Russian revolution of 1917. The Muslim deputies of Erivan gubernia voted for the declaration of independence of Azerbaijan in the borders of the territory of Baku, Yelizavetpol and part of Erivan gubernias. In order to resolve this important issue, the leaders of the Azerbaijani and Armenian fractions met already on the eve of the proclamation of the independence of their republics. On the basis of those meetings, they agreed that Azerbaijan would not oppose the declaration of Erivan as the capital of Armenia, while Armenia—in response to this gesture of good will—would withdraw its demands for part of Yelizavetpol gubernia, that is, to the mountainous part of Karabakh. [6]

On May 29, 1918, F. Kh. Khoyskiy advised the Azerbaijan National Council about negotiations with the Armenian National Council and, in explaining the situation, indicated in particular that the Armenian federation needs a political center. Since Aleksandropol had been seized by the Turks, Erivan could be such a center and therefore he advanced the proposal of conceding this city to the Armenians. Kh. Khasmammadov, M. Yu. Jafarov, A. Sheikhulislamov, and M. Maharramov, who spoke after him, called the concession of Erivan to the Armenians an inevitable evil. Fifteen delegates of the 28 members of the National Council voted in favor of making this concession to the Armenians, one voted against, and three abstained. [7] However, two days later, the members of the National Council who represented Erivan gubernia—Mir Hidayat Seyidov, Bagir Rzayev, and Nariman-bey Narimanbeyov—protested the concession of Erivan to the Armenians. The Azerbaijani National Council at its session of June 1, 1918, rejected the demands of these Erivan deputies. [8] Bagir Rzayev, who spoke at the next session of the Muslim National Council, said the following prophetic words: “I am certain that none of you will go to Erivan gubernia where we Erivantsy will be going, but we ask you one thing: Having formed your own independent Azerbaijan, do not forget those of us who are left on the territory of the Armenian Republic.” [9] The National Council sent M. Seyidov, B. Rzayev, and M. Jafarov to Erivan for resolving the issues arising in connection with the transfer of Erivan to the Armenian National Council.

The Azerbaijani and Armenian delegations in Batumi also discussed border issues and reached an agreement that Azerbaijan agreed with the organization of an Armenian canton within the borders of Aleksandropol gubernia and that Erivan would be handed over to Armenia only on the condition that they would drop claims on portions of Yelizavetpol gubernia, having in mind Karabakh. [10] The Azerbaijani delegates promised also to assist in the conclusion of a treaty between Turkey and Armenia. The Batumi talks were completed on June 4 with the signing by all three republics of a treaty “of peace and friendship.”

At the conclusion of the Batumi conference, Turkey on June 4, 1918, signed treaties with Georgia and, as a result of the mediation of the Azerbaijani delegates, with Armenia, recognizing their independence. Armenia in turn, in its treaty with Turkey, recognized the Brest-Litovsk Treaty, Echmiadzin and Aleksandropol were handed over to Turkey, which also obtained the right to use the Aleksandropol-Julfa road. The border of Armenia passed near Erivan and there were only six kilometers of railway left under its control. According to the Batumi treaty, the territory of the Armenian Republic in the Transcaucasus amounted to about 10,000 square kilometers. [11] R. Kachaznuni, A. Khatisyan and M. Papadzhanov signed for Armenia. The Batumi treaty required that Armenia would guarantee the security and free development of Muslims living on its territories and would create conditions for their education in native language and the celebration of religious rites. The existence of such agreements among the sides is also confirmed in the book of the member of the Georgian delegation to the Paris Peace Conference, Z. Avalov. [12]

Then-Azerbaijani Prime Minister F. Kh. Khoyskiy also mentioned the concession of Erivan to Armenia in his instructions to M.E. Rasulzade, the head of the Azerbaijani delegation in Istanbul: “I am sending you the maps you asked for in one copy with the designation of the borders of Azerbaijan, which you should insist on as strongly as possible; if the Armenians make demands on Karabakh, then you should withdraw the concession to them of Erivan and part of Kazakh district, if the Armenians remain where they are on the basis of the existing oral agreement, then it would be possible to concede to them that portion of Erivan district which is marked on the map by points.” [13] This fact was made public on October 8, 1918, in Tiflis during the negotiations of M. Yu. Jafarov and the Armenian diplomatic representative A. Dzhamalayan, who reported to the Armenian foreign ministry that, “Today, Mr. Jafarov came to me … The conversation rapidly passed onto the question about Karabakh. He recalled the good attitude that Azerbaijanis showed to us during the Batumi conference, that by their efforts, the independence of Armenia was recognized and that Erivan was ceded to us in exchange for our promising not to raise the issue about Karabakh.” [14] Two years after these events, Zangazur experienced the tragic fate of Erivan as a result of its unconscionable concession to Armenia by the Azrevkom, which generated disappointment and anger in the Turkish command.

According to the testimony of B. Shakhtakhtinsky who was in Gumri at the moment of the publication by N. Narimanov of the Declaration of December 1, 1920, this unexpected step of the Azrevkom generated deep regret and anger in Turkish commander Kazym Karabekir-pasha who noted the victory over Dashnak Armenia and the proclamation at the same time of Soviet power in Dilizhan. In a conversation with B. Shakhtakhtinsky, he said: “For tactical considerations, the Azrevkom must not have hurried with the resolution of this issue, at least until the completion of the conference since this action is ascribed to the influence of Russia.” [15] In turn, B. Shakhtakhtinsky following his conversation with Kazym Karabekir-pasha, could only see a way out of the situation generated by such a rapid and unthoughtful step of the Azrevkom in declaring the independence of Nakhchivan under the protection of Russia. He wrote that, “this most important in strategic terms place must not be handed over to the protection of the Turks. The independence of this kray under the protection of Russia should satisfy the Turks. It is possible that in a not distant future, circumstances will force us in the name of an independent Nakhchivan kray to make a move toward Persian Azerbaijan, but this must never be done from Turkey or in the name of Armenia.” [16]

It is worth stressing that Moscow did not oppose the possible transfer of Nakhchivan to the Turks, but only under the condition that Turkey take upon itself the heavy mission of advancing the revolutionary movement in the Muslim East. B. Legran in connection with this wrote to G. Chicherin that, “if it turns out that the Turks are capable of putting revolutionary pressure on the neighboring Muslim countries and that they would be able to raise the revolutionary movement in the East, this would be wonderful; then they would have to be given independence of action, given Nakhchivan, and the size of Soviet Armenia would be reduced, and the like. However, we should test the Turks first.” [17]
